ABOUT THE COVER

M E S S A G E F R O M T H E D E A N

*I*n April 1995, the Duke University School of Law celebrated the dedication of an extensive and elegant addition. President Nannerl Keohane and I presided over the Dedication activities. Sir David Williams, the Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge University, provided an erudite, and often witty, Dedication address.

Pamela B. Gann

The new addition incorporates a distinguished design, impressive building materials, and quiet furnishings to provide a handsome space in which faculty, students, and staff can conduct the activities of a Law School that has achieved eminence in legal education in the United States and increasingly in the world. Society often demonstrates the value that it places on particular human activities by the nature and quality of the buildings housing those activities. The building dedicated in April is designed to rehouse the School of Law in a structure fitting in scope, design, and beauty of materials to the importance of the endeavors of faculty, students, and others who carry out the mission of the Law School. It is also designed on the rich architectural traditions at Duke, and is furnished in granite containing the colors that complement Duke University's beautiful stone.

The activities of the Dedication were designed to remind us of the superb strength of the faculty, the distinction achieved by our alumni, the attainments and creativity of the students, the quality and dedication of the staff, and the commitment we share to the Durham community. The Dedication events and festivities brought the School of Law's constituents together to express our mutual gratitude to those whose generosity made this structure a reality, to celebrate our history and our tradition of distinction, and to rededicate ourselves to achieving our justifiably ambitious mission and goals. This issue of the Duke Law Magazine tries to capture our history, our community, and our preparedness for an ambitious future.

Dean

The Duke University School of Law was organized in 1930 as part of the total restructuring of Trinity College into Duke University. Building upon the initial work of Dean Justin Miller in the 1930s, subsequent deans and faculty over the next sixty years moved the Law School into its present position of preeminence in legal education in the United States. The Law School has now grown in size to a full-time faculty of thirty-three, a part-time and adjunct faculty of more than forty, a student body of 625, and an alumni constituency of 6,000 located in all fifty states of the United States and about thirty-five other countries.

The Law School's development has benefited significantly from being a professional school within a major research university that has achieved distinction across many fields of knowledge. The parallel excellence of both the Law School and the University enables the Law School to adopt as its mission national and international leadership for the following purposes:

- to prepare students through teaching and learning for entry into the legal profession and for lives of significant public and private responsibilities;
- to maintain a community of scholars to improve and illuminate the law and legal institutions through teaching and research;
- to serve the public by applying the learning of its faculty and students for the purposes of law reform and improvements in legal institutions for the betterment of humankind.

With its newly expanded structure, the Duke University School of Law is prepared to enter the 21st century as one of a handful of leading institutions dedicated to professional education of leaders in law and legal institutions.

Braxton Craven

1865

The Law Department is established as one of eleven academic departments in Trinity College.

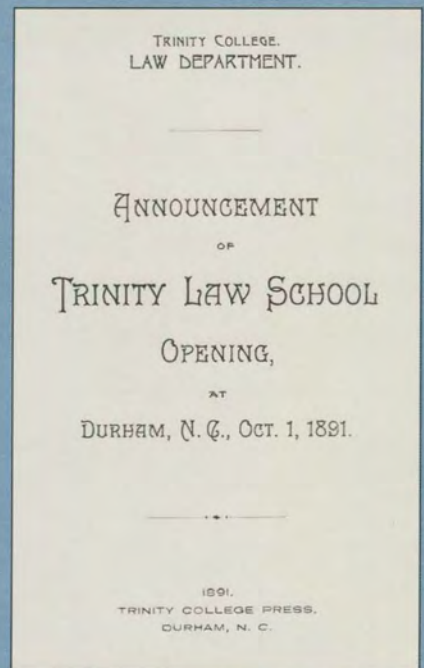

1850

Braxton Craven, President of Normal (later Trinity) College, in Randolph County, North Carolina, the predecessor of Duke University, inaugurates lectures on Political and Natural Law as part of a liberal arts curriculum, which were superseded in 1855 by lectures on Constitutional and International Law.

1868

A separate School of Law is organized to offer professional training.

1887

Legal instruction is resumed as an academic course in the History Department.

1882

The School of Law closes and legal instruction is discontinued following President Craven's death.

Coincident with the removal of Trinity College to Durham, the School of Law is reopened, with Justice A.C. Avery of the North Carolina Supreme Court as its Dean. No undergraduate work is required for admission to the two-year program leading to the LL.B. degree.

▲ The School of Law closes and legal instruction is discontinued for financial reasons.

1904

James Buchanan Duke and Benjamin Newton Duke provide the endowment to reopen the School of Law, and Samuel Fox Mordecai, a Raleigh attorney and part-time law teacher at Wake Forest College, is appointed Senior Professor of Law.

AIMS OF THE LAW DEPARTMENT

The aims of the Law Department in Trinity College are to give such a thorough training in the fundamental principles of Law as is necessary to a right and successful practice of the profession in the commonwealth of this nation; to awaken in young students of law a faith in and admiration for the profession; to develop in them a lively sense of honor and justice; and to fit them in moral character for the delicate duties which belong to this ancient and noble profession.

AUGUST 1904

Professor Mordecai

1905

Professor Mordecai, who has been named Dean, initiates a reorganization of the School of Law, which is housed on the second floor of the East Duke Building. Two years of prelaw study are required for admission to the three-year program leading to the LL.B. degree. The case method is adopted as the basis of instruction. Trinity is admitted to membership in the Association of American Law Schools.

"I have selected Duke University as one of the principal objects of this trust because I recognize that education, when conducted along sane and practical, as opposed to dogmatic and theoretical, lines, is, next to religion, the greatest civilizing influence.... And I advise that the courses at this institution be arranged, first, with special reference to the training of preachers, teachers, lawyers and physicians, because these are most in the public eye, and by precept and example can do most to uplift mankind."

By ALBERT TROSPER
A golden haired Portia—a young woman who can match Stanisla's verities on history as well as literature—soon to take her place as member of the Durham county bar.

Endowed by nature with the most effective argument ever tried on a jury of 12 men, Miss Miriam Cox, the acknowledged barometer, will have the additional, double advantage of familiarity with both the theory and the practice of law.

While the average young attorney makes his appearance before the bar and trembles, Miss Cox will be quite at home. Not only is she learning long law at Duke university—where, by the way, she is the first woman to do so—she is the holder of a first woman law studentship—she also is serving practical law as court stenographer for both Durham and Person counties.

By the way, Miss Cox is a Duke alumna. She was here in the first year of her college course. She dent was admitted to the law school.

1927

The School of Law
moves into renovated quarters in the Carr Building on the newly rebuilt
East Campus.

Dean Mordecai
dies, and Professor W. Bryan Bolich is named Acting Dean.

The first woman
student is admitted.

1930

The School of Law moves into its new building on the Main Quadrangle of the West Campus.

Justin Miller, Dean of the Law School of the University of Southern California, is named Dean, and the faculty is substantially enlarged.

The period of prelaw study required for admission to the LL.B. program is increased to three years, and graduate programs leading to the LL.M. and S.J.D. degrees are established.

Duke is readmitted to membership in the Association of American Law Schools.

Justin Miller

1930

“Altruism combined with realism; knowledge of fundamental principles and capacity to apply them; courage to insist on the right and patience to achieve it; understanding of the timidity of the weak; fearlessness of the domination of the powerful; sympathy for the mistakes of the indiscreet; caution of the craftiness of the unprincipled; enthusiasm for that which is fine and inspiring; reverence for that which is sacred; these are some of the attributes of great lawyers.”

1931

The Duke Bar Association, closely modeled on the American Bar Association, is established by the law students to: “1) foster legal science, 2) maintain the honor and dignity of the legal profession among law students, 3) cultivate professional ethics and social intercourse among its members, and 4) promote the welfare of the Law School of Duke University.”

1932

Clinical legal education is introduced into the curriculum with the establishment of the pioneer Duke Legal Aid Clinic, the first law school-connected program of its kind in the country.

VOLUME I
1933-1934

SCHOOL OF LAW DUKE UNIVERSITY

Law and Contemporary Problems, a faculty-edited quarterly publication, each issue of which is devoted to the cross-disciplinary treatment of a law-related topic, appears.

The Duke Chapter of the Order of the Coif is established.

The Duke Bar Association Journal, a publication modeled after the American Bar Association Journal, appears and continues publication until 1942.

H. Claude Horack

1934

Dean Miller leaves to accept a governmental appointment in President Roosevelt's administration, and he is succeeded as Dean by Professor H. Claude Horack.

1938

Dean Horack oversees the construction of five log cabins on the northern edge of the West Campus. Built to help alleviate the shortage of housing for law students, they are used as dormitory and recreational facilities.

1936

1937

1938

1939

1940

1942-46

Many faculty members leave for wartime service, and student enrollment drops precipitously. The law schools of Duke and Wake Forest combine to conduct a unified operation for the duration in Durham.

1948

The Duke Law Alumni Association is established.

The Prolocutor, a yearbook, appears and continues publication until 1962.

1946

The Bar Rag, a student tabloid sheet, appears and is published until 1959; it reappears in 1964, renamed the Devil's Advocate, and continues publication until 1981.

1949

Dean Shepherd resigns to accept an appointment to the Stanford Law School, and Professor Charles L.B. Lowndes is named Acting Dean.

1947

Dean Horack retires and is succeeded as Dean by Professor Harold Shepherd.

Returning veterans begin to enroll in numbers that will swell the student population to unprecedented size for the next five years.

The Journal of Legal Education, the official organ of the Association of American Law Schools, commences quarterly publication under faculty editorship.

1950

Joseph A. McClain, Jr., a St. Louis attorney and former Dean of the Mercer University School of Law, is named Dean.

1951

The Duke Bar Journal, renamed the Duke Law Journal in 1957, a student-edited, intramural, semi-annual publication, appears.

1956

Dean McClain resigns to return to private practice in the Tampa Bay area of Florida, and Professor Dale E. Stansbury is named Acting Dean.

Elvin R. "Jack" Latty

Professor Elvin R. (Jack) Latty succeeds Professor Stansbury as Acting Dean.

1958

Professor Latty is named Dean.

The Duke Law Journal, adopts its current format, printing leading articles as well as student comments and notes, and moves to a quarterly publication schedule, which becomes a bi-monthly schedule in 1967.

World Rule of Law Center

DR. ARTHUR LARSON, Director of the World Rule of Law Center, directs a discussion group on the peaceful development of a world legal order on Law Day.

1959

The Duke Legal Aid Clinic closes and clinical legal education is discontinued.

The World Rule of Law Center (later styled the Rule of Law Research Center) is established.

1966

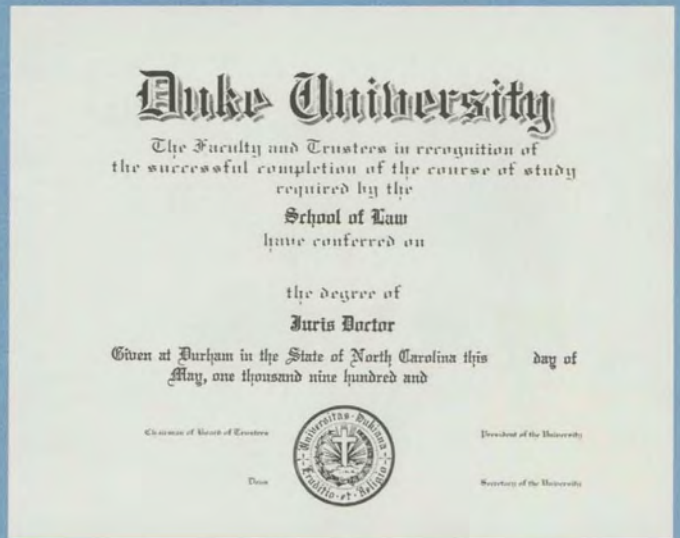

Dean Latty resigns to return to teaching and research, and Professor F. Hodge O'Neal is named Dean.

1968

The LL.B. is replaced by the J.D. as the basic professional degree.

Dean O'Neal resigns to return to teaching and research, and Professor A. Kenneth Pye is named Dean.

Small-section instruction is introduced in conjunction with an intensive research and writing program in all first-year courses.

1967

The MD/JD program, the Law School's first joint-degree program, is inaugurated under co-sponsorship with the Medical School. This program is followed in later years by joint degree programs under co-sponsorship with the Business School, the Institute of Public Policy, the School of the Environment, the Engineering School, and the Graduate School in several disciplines, including anthropology, economics, English, history, philosophy, political science, Romance studies, and the humanities.

A. Kenneth Pye

1970

Dean Pye resigns to become Chancellor of the University, and Professors Elvin R. (Jack) Latty, F. Hodge O'Neal, and Melvin G. Shimm are constituted an Executive Committee to administer the Law School until Professor Joseph T. Sneed, of Stanford Law School, who has been named Dean, arrives in 1971.

1966

1968

1969

1970

1972

Clinical legal education is reintroduced into the curriculum.

The Barristers organization is established to honor key benefactors whose generous gifts enable the School to continue its commitment to excellence in education and research. The Barristers take as logo the image carved above the entrance of the original law building on the West Quad.

The first electronic search service becomes available in the Law School library to be followed in 1986 by the installation of an on-line catalog.

Dean Sneed resigns to accept appointment as Deputy Attorney General of the United States, and Chancellor Pye resumes the deanship.

The Duke Endowment establishes the first faculty chair at the Law School, the William R. and Thomas L. Perkins Professorship. The chair is followed by the establishment of a number of other endowed professorships and faculty research support funds:

the William Neal Reynolds Professorship in 1975;

the Harry R. Chadwick, Sr. Professorship in 1978;

the Eugene S. Bost Research Professorship in 1980;

the Russell M. Robinson, II Professorship in 1988;

the Charles L.B. Lowndes Professorship in 1990; and the Martha Garner Price Research Fellowship Fund in 1972.

1978

“It may be that the most important effects of a Duke law education on lawyer competence are not immediately aimed at job performance. Thus, among the tasks that the faculty sets for itself is to enable students to perceive law as a humanist discipline, demanding in its intricacy, but incorporating at times the whole range of human experience. What students bring to law study in understanding history, philosophy, literature, anthropology, and a dozen other disciplines is truly relevant and ought not be left at the portals of courtrooms and law offices. The lawyer who retains a generous sense of relevance is more likely to grow in wisdom and judgment over the longer term of his or her career.”

- PAUL D. CARRINGTON, DEAN,
DUKE UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF LAW
1978-1988

Professor Paul D. Carrington, of the University of Michigan Law School, is named Dean.

1978

a Tradition of Distinction

The Barristers

A tradition of distinction has evolved at Duke University School of Law — a tradition, more than one hundred years in the making, that is realized through eminent faculty and top-quality alumni and students.

Such distinction has not been attained without the enduring effort and support from alumni, faculty, parents and friends of the School of Law — and, more recently, from members of The Barristers.

Created in 1977, The Barristers honors key benefactors whose generous contributions enable the School of Law to continue its commitment to excellence in education and research. Barrister membership reflects exemplary support for the School of Law and its tradition of distinction.

*The ocean is open for hundreds of rivers,
It is magnanimous, thus becomes vast and magnificent.
The lofty peak is thousands of feet high,
It is natural and unadorned, thus it makes the majesty.*

1982

Students under faculty supervision assume major editorial responsibility for Law and Contemporary Problems.

The Duke Law Magazine, a semi-annual Law School alumni publication, appears replacing the Duke Docket, a tabloid publication which had been published since 1979.

A Law School Annual Report begins publication and marks the first appearance of a new Law School logo designed by Karen Havighurst.

1985/86

The J.D./LL.M. (International and Comparative Law) combined degree program, the first of its kind in the country, is inaugurated.

The LL.M. program for foreign-trained lawyers is expanded and rapidly grows to over 40 enrolled international students annually by 1994.

The Law Alumni Association begins to charter local associations to foster and maintain Law School ties with and among the widely geographically dispersed members of the alumni body. By 1995, 46 local associations, including six associations abroad, have been chartered.

The Law Alumni Association begins sponsorship of programs to benefit the students with the annual Career Conference, a series of panel discussions featuring alumni in various legal careers.

The Alaska Law Review, a student-edited, practitioner-oriented, semi-annual publication, underwritten by the Alaska Bar Association, appears.

1986

The Duke Summer Institute in Transnational Law is inaugurated in Copenhagen, Denmark, where it continues to be conducted until its removal to Brussels, Belgium, in 1991.

1988

Dean Carrington resigns to return to teaching and research, and Professor Pamela B. Gann is named Dean.

The Duke International and Comparative Law Annual, a student-edited publication, renamed the Duke Journal of Comparative and International Law and moving to a semi-annual publication schedule in 1990, appears.

“Duke University School of Law holds a position of eminence in legal education in the United States and increasingly in the world. We seek to ensure that the Law School never fails to provide leadership in creating an effective community of scholars, in educating the best students for the legal profession, and in serving the public by improving the law and legal institutions for the betterment of humankind.”

Phase I of the building program, remodeling Level 1 of the law library and installing compact shelving, is accomplished. The student computer network is implemented with 15 terminals; the network will grow to 35 terminals in 1992 and 85 terminals in 1995.

Phase II of the building program is initiated with the ground breaking for the building addition and completion of the renovation of the law library.

1991

The Duke Environmental Law and Policy Forum, a student-edited annual publication, appears.

A voluntary Pro Bono program is established with 44 students providing assistance to programs in the Durham community, growing to over 180 students participating each year by 1995.

“Everyone present at the Convocation is celebrating, in the grounds of a great University and a great Law School, the achievements of American law. It has been a unique privilege for me, as an English lawyer, to be invited to deliver this keynote address and be able to touch upon, albeit selectively, our shared heritage in constitutional law. Through my postgraduate studies in the United States and subsequently, it was my good fortune to meet some of the leaders of American legal education: William Lloyd Prosser, Lon Fuller, Roscoe Pound, Erwin Griswold, and many others. They have been an inspiration to me ever since, and today at this Convocation I sense the same spirit of courage and commitment to the legal process which they demonstrated so effectively and so unselfishly. The new building reflects that courage and commitment.”

As we are gathered here, we want to celebrate the birth of a building and an image. ...From my first efforts to find an architectural answer to an academic law building, I was in search of an expressive concept. And from the very first law building concept, I have been influenced by an inscription found over an archway in a law building hallway. It caught my attention and has affected my creative thinking ever since. It said: "The life of the law has not been logic, it has been experience". When I inquired, I found that it had been said by Oliver Wendell Holmes...

Today, the life of this building we are dedicating is based on experience. Experience and history. It is based on the genealogy of the two "parents" or the two campuses — the colonial/classical campus and the gothic campus. So, the challenge for the Architect was to respond to both "parents". Should there be direct expressions of one or the other or both? The edifice we are celebrating today has an image and life of its own and still it's congenial with the prevailing architectural vernacular. Buildings, like humans, have faces. They express their personality. Today we are seeing the new image of the building. On the exterior, it dialogues with the surrounding. But in the court, we are surrounded with our own expression — a space, intimate and more like an interior space. At this moment, since we have not addressed all directions on the outside, you may see two faces depending on which side you look. But ultimately, the completed new expression will unify the whole. Right now it's the heartbeat that counts.

“We faculty, students, and staff did suffer together as we lived through a two-year construction site. But hardship often produces a bonding among humans that the easy life can never provide. And so the process of completing this building, then in watching it change through the rendering of all the fine touches, including the art, the sculpture, and this spring the flowering trees and bulbs, has strengthened our community.”

“The effort to raise the funds for this wonderful building had the additional benefit of bringing the Law School and its alumni much closer together. The hundreds of visits throughout the entire country with graduates of the Duke Law School rekindled alumni interest in the school, and created a great deal of good will which will benefit Duke for years to come. The alumni rose to the occasion and not only gave generously, but assisted in solicitations. They were the foot soldiers of the campaign. Many of the alumni gifts were of very significant size and importance, and all of them were greatly appreciated. The graduates of the Duke Law School proved they have a high level of affection and regard for the school which provided them with an excellent legal education.”

THE BUILDING ADDITION

The four-story, 84,000 square foot addition is part of a three-phase expansion and reconstruction of the Duke University Law School building, which will house the law school faculty and student body in a building that visually signifies the importance of their work and contributions to society. It also provides the capability and flexibility to take the School into the next era of innovative legal education. The building addition is designed by Gunnar Birkerts and Associates, who specialize in academic architecture and who have received international recognition for design excellence. The architectural expression of the enhanced Law School building is an eclectic metamorphosis of the rich Gothic and Georgian traditions at Duke University. The design accommodates the redevelopment of the library into a spacious, state-of-the-art facility, new classrooms, renovated student spaces, expanded and improved space for the faculty, an administrative office pavilion, dramatic public spaces within the building, and a significant transformation of the building's external appearance.

This addition meets the expanded space needs of the Law School. The Law School's original building on this site, dedicated in 1963, was intended for a student body of 300 students and 15 faculty and contains approximately 100,000 square feet. Today the Law School's total enrollment is approximately 625 students, and its full-time faculty numbers over 30. Given the growth in the student body and student activities, the faculty, and the library collection, the facility became inadequate to support the School's educational and professional programs. Moreover, the offices of Alumni Affairs, Major Projects, and Admissions were housed off-campus. In addition to its inadequate size, the facility lacked the capability to utilize modern technologies in support of the School's innovative teaching, research, and administrative functions. The building addition meets these critical needs.

The design and engineering features of the building addition will meet the varied needs of students who spend many hours in the law school environment, both during and after classes, performing a range of activities that may include quiet study or intense research; discussions with a study group; working on programs for a journal, moot court, or student organization; or simply enjoying the company of friends and colleagues. The students will benefit most directly from improvements in three areas: the library and academic computing, the delivery of administrative services, and the public spaces.

THE LIBRARY AND ACADEMIC COMPUTING. The Phase II addition and renovation enlarges the law library from 40,000 to over 65,000 net square feet and is designed to accommodate both the traditional and the rapidly changing research needs of the law school community in comfortable surroundings. The renovated library will eventually hold more than 500,000 hard-copy volumes, 200,000 of which are stored in movable shelving that has allowed the library to make available additional carrels, study rooms, and other facilities without dramatically increasing the footprint of the building. To meet current needs and to anticipate rapidly changing library use, the library now provides nearly 300 individual study carrels, 175 of which are wired for connections to the Student Research Network, which provides a full range of computer-based research and writing tools to student researchers, including access to the Internet. Eighty-five carrels are supplied with computers for student use. In addition, the library now features eight large student conference rooms for individual or group study or meetings, two audio/visual viewing rooms, a new rare books and special collections room, renovated computer-training and photocopy rooms, an internal elevator, and improved arrangements of bookstacks and study areas on each floor.

ADMINISTRATIVE SERVICES. The building addition provides inviting office space for all the administrative departments, which guide students from admission, through their lives at the Law School, to their status as alumni. The most dramatic improvements have occurred in the Career Services facilities, where assistance is provided for both job searches and career counseling. Close to the center of student activities, this office now provides ample space for greeting on-campus interviewers, a library of career-related literature with comfortable reading areas, and electronically accessible employment research through eight computer workstations. All administrative offices are connected to the Law School computer network, which allows for improved communications internally and with the greater University community.

LEVEL II
CONCOURSE

PUBLIC SPACES. Both interior and exterior design features allow ease of access and movement while encouraging assembly and conversation. The building addition includes airy concourses permitting smooth traffic flow on each of the three main floors with a dignified central circular stairway. Seating areas throughout the building provide settings for study and discussion. A wide variety of artwork displays, including works on loan from the Duke University Art Museum, decorate the interior spaces, providing history, context, intellectual stimulation, and beauty. The external character and appearance of the addition and of portions of the existing building are improved by granite walls and a two-story bay window fronting the courtyard entrance. The law school community can now make best use of the balmy North Carolina climate in attractive, well-designed outdoor areas. A courtyard with lighted, interlocking stone walkways and tree-shaded benches provides a welcome repose from the intensity of law study. A picnic area in the surrounding wooded area and a redesigned volleyball court allow for quiet study or conversation as well as for student-sponsored social activities.

COURTYARD

The features of the building addition and the proposed Phase III of the building program place Duke Law School at the forefront of technological innovation while maintaining its commitment to a tradition of small classes, faculty/student interaction and intellectual collegiality among a diverse faculty.

THE FACULTY. New faculty offices offer ample space for research needs as well as for meetings with students and colleagues. All offices are computer-equipped and fully networked, providing electronic access to research databases, word processing, internal mail, and the Internet. The Law School has a significant number of faculty who hold joint appointments with other divisions of Duke University and with other universities, adjunct faculty who teach primarily professional skills courses, and visiting foreign faculty and researchers. The offices accommodate a diverse faculty and create a collegial national and international community. A faculty lounge and meeting room occupies a dramatic two-story bridge above the new courtyard entrance, providing flexible space for faculty workshops and meetings or quiet conversation and reading, as well as for gala gatherings and elegant social events.

FACULTY OFFICE

TEACHING FACILITIES. The building addition houses five new seminar and conference rooms to be used for small-section classes, seminars, meetings, and other events. Designed to accommodate traditional teaching methodologies and to take advantage of innovations occurring rapidly in the information age, all rooms in the new space are computer network-connected to enable use of remote databases or locally created computer-based resources in the curriculum and to provide access to video services. Full renovation and reconfiguration of larger classrooms and courtrooms in the original building are in the Phase III planning stages and should provide full access to new instructional technologies, including distance learning programs.

PROFESSIONAL SCHOOL COMPLEX. The Duke University School of Law sits across the street from the new Terry Sanford Institute of Public Policy and side-by-side with the J.B. Fuqua School of Business. Together, these three nationally renowned academic institutions form a geographically contiguous center of professional training and scholarship that is almost unique among universities. The centralized location of these institutions will facilitate joint degree programs undertaken by students, joint appointments of faculty, and interdisciplinary research, seminars, and other collaborative efforts, and will improve the fine partnership that these institutions already enjoy.

CONFERENCE ROOM

PHASE III

Phase III of the building program will renovate the remainder of the present facility. This renovation will upgrade classrooms in the original building, including state-of-the-art technological improvements to enable more varied teaching methods. Comfortable, well-designed spaces will be provided for student journals and other student activities. Refacing the original building with granite will result in a dramatic, coherent exterior with large bay windows that will provide natural light to study and public areas. A new formal entrance at the corner of the intersecting campus streets will create a dramatic focal point.

“The final phase of Gunnar Birkerts’ complete renovation and redesign of the present red brick building has been left to the near future. In the meantime, our building, like Janus, depicts two faces. But in possessing those two faces — one from 1963 and another from 1994 — we continually remind ourselves of our progressive historical steps, and that progress in research universities, and in the field of law in particular, does not come through spectacular bursts of energy and discovery, but rather, progresses through continuous creativity in our quest to illuminate the law. Life, like architecture, is a responsible art, bridging a long span of time, and is to be approached with reason and inspiration.”

The Dedication Celebration

DEDICATION

The Law School celebrated the completion of its building addition by staging a variety of events April 6-8. Over the three day Dedication Celebration twenty different events were held embracing all constituents of the Law School. Noted Evelyn Pursley, dean for alumni programs who coordinated the Celebration, "We very much wanted to include everyone in the extended Law School community — in all of our constituent groups — in this celebration through a variety of events that would both educate and entertain them."

"We are here this morning to celebrate the completion and occupancy of the extensive and magnificent addition to the Duke University School of Law. But by gathering here, we do much, much more than this. We are really celebrating our rightful place among a handful of the most eminent research universities in the world and the appropriateness of law and legal institutions among the fields of knowledge tackled seriously by such an organization. Our research universities have excelled in organizing humankind to advance our understanding of ourselves and the space that we occupy. And, we here at this fine Law School seek to do nothing less ambitious than to be a law school that never fails to provide leadership in creating an effective community of scholars, in educating the most talented students for the legal profession, and in serving the public by improving the law and legal institutions for the betterment of humankind."

On Thursday Professor Jonathan Wiener led a group of 180 law school students, faculty and staff in "Dedicated to Durham," a half-day of community service projects for seventeen local non-profit programs. Volunteers convened at the Law School in the morning for juice and mutual encouragement before traveling in small groups to the various project sites. Projects ranged from yard work at an after-school program to painting at a shelter or light construction at a halfway house. Said Wiener, "We thought this kind of project would help the law school community become more engaged in the community that surrounds Duke. As part of dedicating our new space, we're also rededicating ourselves to being a constructive part of the broader Durham community."

STUDENTS ENJOY A NORTH CAROLINA BARBEQUE

Also on Thursday, the students celebrated with a volleyball tournament and barbeque in the newly designed and landscaped recreation area which includes a volleyball court and picnic tables among the trees alongside the building. Twenty-four teams including over seventy students competed throughout the afternoon. Everyone enjoyed a North Carolina barbeque. Said Tom Morey, President of the Duke Bar Association, "This was one of the most enjoyable events of the year, and it was nice that the tournament could be held on the Law School grounds as it helps people think of the Law School as more than just a place to study."

Meanwhile on Thursday the faculty and staff together celebrated the completion of the construction of the building addition during a Faculty/Staff Appreciation Luncheon in the student lounge where they could also enjoy the first viewing of an exhibit on the history of the Law School. Flanked by exhibit panels with photographs of the building addition under construction and completed, Dean Gann thanked all assembled for their patience and understanding during the construction period and particularly acknowledged those who helped oversee the project for the School. Professor Haagen, who served as the liaison for the law school administration during the construction of the building addition, then recalled the trials and triumphs of the construction period that were suffered and survived together.

In the afternoon, a group of students, with the help of several faculty members, made excellent use of the new Courtyard for the staging of a play, "The Princess Bride," which was attended by a cross section of the Law School community. The first such production was such a success that the students hope to stage future productions.

“Although I do not place much stock in ‘signs,’ a few days ago, as I was walking back from the Union Building along Towerview Drive, I experienced something of an epiphany. The day was bright and warm, the sky was blue and cloudless (as it often is in the early spring in North Carolina), and I was idly ruminating what I might say this evening. As I looked up, I saw the old Law Building framed against the new addition that was rising behind it. And suddenly there came to mind Caesar Augustus’s boast: ‘I found Rome a city of brick; I left it a city of marble.’ What a wonderfully apposite metaphor, I thought, for the Law School today. In a literal and figurative sense, most of us have experienced the Law School as a solid, substantial, eminently service-able, ‘red-brick’ type of institution. But fired by love of this school and faith in its future, we will have transformed it into a shining monument stunning to behold and worthy of the ever greater law school that we are and will be building within its sheltering confines.”

DEDICATION CELEBRATION DINNER
FRIDAY, APRIL 7, 1995

On Friday evening, Barristers and campaign donors joined with other alumni leaders, Duke officers and law school faculty for a gala dinner dance hosted by Dean Gann and President Keohane where they were acknowledged for their support of the Law School by John Lowndes, Chair of the Law School Campaign and Ken Starr, Chair of the Barristers. They were also treated to remarks on the history of the Law School by Professor Mel Shimm who received a standing ovation from the assembly.

JOHN '58 AND RITA LOWNDES ARE THANKED FOR THEIR SUPPORT BY DEAN PAMELA GANN

Also on Friday evening the Duke Bar Association christened the new Courtyard with a keg party for the students. Tom Morey, President of the Duke Bar Association said that he hoped that it would be the first of many occasions when the students could make good use of this lovely outdoor facility.

“I think the Law School’s relationship with its alumni is something quite rare and very precious. For me — and for many of my colleagues as well — this relationship is reflected not only in the genuine sense of fraternity that we share and enjoy with so many of you, but also in the exemplary support you have given in so many ways to the Law School, and most especially in the drive for this magnificent edifice whose dedication we celebrate this weekend. We, the faculty and administration, cherish this relationship, and we welcome opportunities such as this at which we can express our deep gratitude to you and reaffirm the warm reciprocal regard in which we hold you all.”

GUNNAR BIRKERTS, JOHN A. KOSKINEN,
DEAN PAMELA B. GANN

On Saturday morning major benefactors of the Law School gathered before the formal dedication ceremony for breakfast in the attractive and spacious new Burdman Lounge where Dean Gann gratefully acknowledged their exemplary support for the School.

“The heart of any school must be its faculty, and its continued excellence must lie in the strength of its academic programs. These qualities of the Duke Law School have sustained it well, for, truth be told, the quality of our physical facilities for the study of law have for some years not kept pace with the quality of our faculty, our programs, or the students who receive their training here. But today, as we dedicate this splendidly renovated and enlarged home for the Duke School of Law, we take comfort in the knowledge that these long-awaited new facilities provide a physical environment in which the best work of faculty and students alike can flourish.

And thus as we dedicate this new home for the Duke School of Law, we reaffirm our commitment to the vision outlined by James Buchanan Duke, and pledge ourselves to continuing this school's legacy of excellence into the 21st century.”

—PRESIDENT NAN KEOHANE
REMARKS AT THE DEDICATION CEREMONY
SATURDAY APRIL 8, 1995

“On behalf of all current students at Duke Law I would like to thank Dean Gann and our alumni. Dean Gann, the reality of this situation is that our new building would probably not exist if it were not for your hard work in raising the money necessary to get the job done. So on behalf of students, I thank you. And to you, the alums of Duke Law. If it were not for your generous contributions, we would also not be here. So on behalf of students, I thank you. You are an inspiration to current and future Duke Law students to participate in the life of our school after graduation. And so finally, on behalf of all Duke Law students, I am proud to accept the new Law School building. I know that we will use it well.”

—THOMAS C. MOREY, DUKE BAR ASSOCIATION PRESIDENT
REMARKS AT THE DEDICATION CEREMONY

ALBANY POLICE PIPES & DRUMS

The Dedication Ceremony, which was held overlooking the new wing, featured a faculty procession lead by the Albany Police Pipes and Drums band who appeared in memory of law school alumnus and band member, Phil Sloan L'74, for whom the Alumni Relations Suite in the new wing is named. Many of the assembled alumni and faculty remembered that, while a student, Phil had often practiced the bagpipes in the back yard of the Law School where the building addition now stands.

Recognizing the internationalizing of Duke Law School, key note speaker for the ceremony was Sir David Williams, a distinguished scholar in the fields of Constitutional and environmental law and public law generally, who serves as Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge University, the highest administrative post in British universities. The architect for the building addition, Gunnar Birkerts, explained his vision of the building before it was presented on behalf of the Duke Board of Trustees by John Koskinen, current Chair of the Board. The building was accepted on behalf of the extended law school community by Dean Gann speaking for the faculty and staff; Lanty Smith, Chair of the Law School Board of Visitors, representing the alumni; and Tom Morey, President of the Duke Bar Association, representing the students. President Keohane then spoke acknowledging the importance of the Law School and its new addition to the University as a whole.

Luncheon (following the dedication)	12:00 noon
Building tours	2:00-4:00 pm
Barristers Dinner	7:00 pm

“This is a truly first class building that houses a widely-recognized, first class law school. This school and its physical home will continue to add luster to the reputation of Duke University in the years ahead. We are blessed to have all of you here today as friends and supporters. You have been true to James B. Duke’s request that the education of lawyers be a priority for Duke University.

Therefore, on behalf of the Board of Trustees of Duke University, I am pleased to present this building to the Law School’s alumni, students and faculty. May you and this school prosper in the days, years and generations ahead.”

—JOHN A. KOSKINEN
REMARKS AT THE DEDICATION CEREMONY
SATURDAY APRIL 8, 1995

The ceremony was followed by a luncheon for all guests during which the Pipes and Drums band provided an impromptu concert. While some guests ate overlooking the new entrance of the Law School, others enjoyed lunch in the new loggia overlooking the Courtyard.

Also on this weekend the Law School Board of Visitors and the Law Alumni Association Board of Directors held spring meetings.

A LUNCHEON FOR ALL GUESTS FOLLOWED THE DEDICATION CEREMONY

Many guests took building tours on Friday or Saturday afternoon. Current students lead visitors through the new wing while law librarians showed them the new features in the enlarged law library complete with hands-on demonstrations of the new computer facilities.

On Saturday evening Law School Barristers enjoyed a reception with around three hundred students and their guests before completing the Weekend with a final dinner.

“In June of this year there will be celebrations at the University of Cambridge to mark the completion of an entirely new building for the Faculty of Law. Hence we are able to appreciate and savour the excitement and the satisfaction shared by so many people here today celebrating the dedication of the building addition to Duke University School of Law. The style and distinction of the building fairly reflect the high national and international reputation of Duke Law School. It will provide enviable facilities for generations of those who work and those who study at the Law School and it already offers a signal contribution to the varied campus of Duke University.

Today the President of Duke and her colleagues, Dean Gann and her colleagues, the architect, the chair of the Duke University Board of Trustees, the many and generous benefactors, the students of Duke Law School past and present, must feel a very special sense of pride in what has been achieved and a very special sense of optimism for the future.”

STUDENTS AND ALUMNI ENJOYED A RECEPTION TOGETHER BEFORE SATURDAY NIGHT'S BARRISTERS DINNER.

“Great institutions, and Duke Law School is a great institution, not only have an accurate sense of the present (that is, of what they are) and a well-conceived vision of the future (that is, of what they aspire to become), but they also have an institutional memory — a reverence and appreciation for history.

As we celebrate this dedication, it is both appropriate and incumbent that we remember and appreciate on whose shoulders we are standing.

But our sense of history must always be joined by a sense of mission. Through purpose, we both define our objectives and give meaning to our striving. May our collective mission at Duke Law School always be to make the world a more civil, civilized, just and humane place. May we teach and learn that the judicial system must be designed both to give order to our society and to achieve justice within it.

On behalf of the Duke Law School alumni, I am honored to accept this building and to say a warm and special thank you to all who have made it possible, to the University for its support and to those on whose shoulders we stand today. May we use this marvelous facility to continue the outstanding teaching and learning which have been a hallmark of Duke Law School throughout this century.”
